College hosts campus police program

Campus police officers from seven area colleges came to Gallaudet recently to participate in the first campus law enforcement academy for area campus police, a program described as "an important milestone" by organizers.

Representatives from the protective forces of Gallaudet and Trinity Colleges, the University of the District Columbia and Catholic, American, Howard and Georgetown Universities attended the program.

Known as the Campus Law Enforcement Academy of the District of Columbia, the program offered participants a four-week basic program and an extended seven-week program in law enforcement in an academic setting. The Academy, which began at the end of October, marked the first time security personnel from different colleges met as a group to train.

"This was an experimental class and as far as we know it's the first of its kind offered in the country," said Karen Gray, a campus police officer at Gallaudet and the assistant coordinator for the Academy. "It was felt that if we pooled our resources we could provide a more comprehensive training program."

While each college provides training for its officers, the Campus Law Enforcement Academy sought to supplement that training. Listed among its goals were the following:

- to provide specialized training especially relevant to campus police security personnel;
- to upgrade the quality of routine security, police and safety services individual officers are able to provide on a day-to-day basis;
- to expand both the quantity and quality of training available to campus

Games officials announce selections

The U.S. Team Committee for the 1985 World Games for the Deaf announced at a press conference on campus last month its selection of team members, coaches and support staff who will participate in the Games to be held in Los Angeles, CA, in July. The press conference was held Thursday, Dec. 13 at "Ole Jim."

Vice Chairman of the U.S. Team Committee Donald Ammons, an instructor of Romance Languages at Gallaudet, made the announcement of team members, coaches and support staff. The Gallaudet participants were listed in the Oct. 15 and Oct. 22 issues of On the Green.

President Ronald Reagan accepted the role of honorary chairman of the Games. The World Games will be held in the United States for the first time since 1965 when the international competition was held in Washington, D.C.

The July Games are expected to be the largest in the 61-year history of the World Games. Approximately 45 nations and 2,500 athletes are expected to participate.

The United States is entering the largest team ever in the history of the World Games and will have athletes from all over the country competing in 12 of the 13 sports.

The athletes will compete at the same Los Angeles sites used for the 1984 Olympic Games. The U.S. team will train three weeks prior to the Games at the U.S. Olympics training camp in Colorado Springs.

National Academy co-sponsors two-day workshop on family violence

The National Academy recently co-sponsored a two-day workshop on family violence in the deaf community, the second in its series of "Hot Topics" for professionals working with families that have deaf members.

The workshop, co-sponsored with the Mental Health Hearing Impaired Program of the St. Paul-Ramsey Hospital in St. Paul, MN, was offered Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 in San Francisco, CA.

Thirty-three mental health professionals from around the nation attended the seminar to learn strategies and techniques for assisting abusive families with deaf members.

The workshop was the second of three workshops co-sponsored by the National Academy which address issues of importance to mental health professionals. The topics were selected from responses to a Gallaudet survey taken two years ago asking professionals what issues they'd like to see addressed in workshops.

Along with the seminar on family violence, a workshop on deafness in the family was held several months ago in Boston. Another workshop—entitled "Meeting the Needs of Families with Deaf Members: A Structural Family Therapy Approach"—is planned for April in San Francisco.

The seminars are designed for psychologists, psychiatrists, social workers, counselors and other mental health professionals who provide clinical services to families as well as audiologists, residential care facility staff members, educators and others who provide both formal and informal consultation with families.

Most of the professionals attending the seminar on family violence were psychologists and social workers, according to Corinne Jensema, director of the National Academy's Office of Training.

Jensema, who coordinated the workshop, stated that deafness compounds the problem of family violence—making complex problems even more complex.

"Because deaf people don't have as much access to the media as hearing people, they sometimes don't understand and that makes them more vulnerable," Jensema explained, noting that statistics indicate a higher rate of abuse and neglect among handicapped people in general.

Virginia Cowgell, director of the Counseling and Placement Center, gave the opening presentation during the seminar, tracing the history of abuse and attitudes toward women and children—the chief targets of abuse.

In discussing the subject, participants talked about therapeutic intervention and techniques and different types of abuse. Case studies were also presented and discussed during the workshop.

Participants learned to identify stresses within a family with deaf children and/or parents which may lead to physical abuse; learned legal, social and practical issues involved when providing services to abusive families; and outlined intervention strategies and techniques for abusive families.

Marjoriebell Holcomb, director of the College's extension center at Ohlone College in California, and Bruce Heller, director of Training at the University of California Center on Deafness, assisted Jensema with the seminar in California.

The last workshop in the "Hot Topics" series—"Meeting the Needs of Families with Deaf Members"—is scheduled for April 20 and 21. The

Education grants

Cooperative agreements for special education and related services for deaf-blind children and youth are invited to apply to the Department of Education for funding.

This program supports projects in vocational and transitional services, technical assistance to state educational agencies and other services to deaf-blind children and youth such as counseling and training for parents and professionals.

Awards will be given for up to a two-year period, with funding based on the extent to which applicants address priorities described in the Dec. 17, 1984 Federal Register.

The deadline for applications is March 1, 1985. For more information, call the Office of Sponsored Research at x5030 or the Department of Education at 732-1165.

law enforcement officials beyond the limitations of any one agency by utilizing the resources of all the area colleges and universities;

- to represent suggested model minimum training standards criteria for any possible future consideration of mandatory requirements by the Washington, D.C. City Council or by Congress in terms of campus police or security personnel; and
- to enable individual officers to perform more knowledgeably and reliably in police, medical or fire emergencies.

The classes offered in the program were in some ways similar to classes offered by any police agency. Participants studied criminal law and were given instruction in report writing, traffic accidents and drugs. But all of the classes were geared toward security procedures in a campus setting, with a great deal of discussion focusing on fire procedures and patrol techniques for a campus.

Although most of the instructors work within a campus law enforcement force, some work with the District police force and the FBI. An attorney taught the class in criminal law.

Following the basic training program, which was held Oct. 29 through Nov. 28, an extended program in firearms training was held through Dec. 19. The extended program also dealt with emergency medical services training, Gray said.

Seventeen persons—including three campus police officers from Gallaudet—took part in the four-week class, with eight students participating in the seven-week program.

The planning committee for the Academy hopes that eventually the program will become a recruit class offered several times a year, Gray said. Allen Nowell, the assistant chief of Gallaudet's force, served as the coordinator for the Academy.

Among Ourselves

Shigeyuki and Michiyo Tsuzuki, international interns studying at Gallaudet, were married Oct. 14. Shigeyuki is a two-year visiting researcher/intern and Michiyo is an audiologist and speech therapist who works at the Ichikawa Education and Welfare Center for the Handicapped in Ichikawa, Japan. Shigeyuki works at the University of Tsukuba, Institute of Special Education in Tsukuba, Japan, where he is a research assistant. Most of his research is devoted to education and the psychology of deaf persons.

The couple has been in the United States since March and at Gallaudet since August. Shigeyuki, who will help in establishing the first junior college for deaf students in Japan, is studying administration and communication while at Gallaudet.

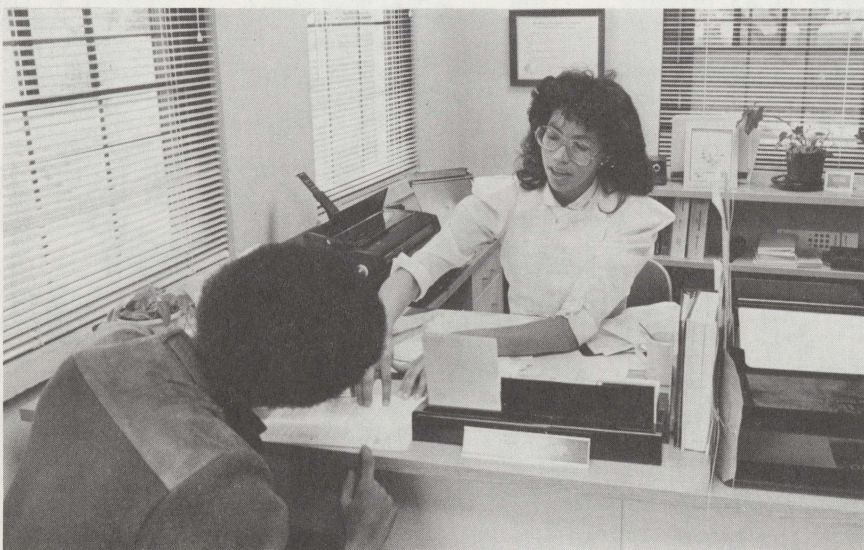

Their hectic work schedules in Japan prevented them from getting married in their home country. Said Shigeyuki in explaining why they chose to marry here: "Gallaudet is a start of my new life. This is a memorable place for me. My wedding and Gallaudet have given me a new life."

The couple was married at the Christ Episcopal Church in Rockville, MD, in a ceremony attended mostly by friends from Gallaudet.

Virginia Cowgell of the Counseling and Placement Center in Student Affairs is serving as a field visitor for the International Association of Counseling Services (IACS). Thus far she has visited three counseling centers, including college counseling centers and community agencies, to prepare reports on the centers' eligibility for certification as an IACS-recognized counseling center. Gallaudet's Counseling and Placement Center was re-certified last spring.

Morris Goldman of the Sociology Department was elected to the Association of Chiefs of Police. He is one of the very few non-chiefs of police to be permitted to join the organization. This is in recognition of past services to various police training programs.

James Mahshie of the Department of Audiology presented a paper at the annual convention of the American Speech, Language and Hearing Association Nov. 16-19 in San Francisco, CA. The title of his paper was "Using Airflow Feedback to Modify the Speech of Deaf Individuals."

Seminar set Feb. 4-22

The International Center on Deafness will sponsor an international seminar on current trends in deaf education next month. The seminar will be held Feb. 4-22.

Participants will travel to Gallaudet from 11 Latin American countries. They will stay on campus during the seminar, which will be interpreted into Spanish.

Anyone interested in meeting any of the seminar participants should contact the International Center at x5316.

seminar will explore the application of structural family therapy techniques with families that have deaf members.

That workshop will be co-sponsored with the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic, which is internationally recognized as a leading facility for the teaching of family therapy.

Interpreter laws and area court systems

This article was written by Sy DuBow and Elaine Gardner of the National Center for Law and the Deaf.

If you are deaf, your chances of getting a qualified interpreter for different court and administrative proceedings depend on where you live.

The interpreter laws vary greatly in Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Virginia's laws offer the most comprehensive coverage to deaf residents, with Maryland's a close second and the District of Columbia lagging behind.

Virginia

Deaf residents of Virginia have the following rights to interpreters:

- In any criminal case, the court shall appoint a qualified interpreter and pay for the interpreter out of court funds;
- In any civil case, the court shall appoint a qualified interpreter upon request of the hearing impaired person. The interpreter shall be paid out of court funds or payment may, in the court's discretion, be assessed as a part of the cost of the proceedings; and
- In any agency proceeding, the agency shall pay for a qualified interpreter.

In all of the above situations, courts and agencies must go through the Virginia Council for the Deaf (VCD) to provide qualified interpreters for deaf residents of Virginia. The VCD will not provide an interpreter for a deaf person living outside of Virginia. The VCD can be contacted toll-free within Virginia at 800-552-7917 or from other locations at 804-786-1381.

Maryland

Maryland has the following laws covering interpreters:

- In any criminal proceeding, qualified interpreters shall be appointed for deaf defendants throughout the proceedings. The interpreters shall be paid by the court;

- In civil cases, the court shall appoint a qualified interpreter after a deaf party or witness has requested one.

The court can tax, as part of the costs of the case, amounts paid to an interpreter for services and expenses or the amount can be paid with county funds. Both Montgomery and Prince George's counties, upon request, usually pay the interpreter out of county funds. Other counties more often tax the losing party the amounts owed to the interpreter; and

- In administrative proceedings, interpreters are appointed only if there is a "contested" case before the agency. Payment to interpreters is similar to payment in civil proceedings.

District of Columbia

In the District of Columbia, however, hearing impaired individuals are guaranteed interpreters only in the following circumstances:

- In any contested case before an agency, a party or witness who is hearing impaired may apply to the agency for an interpreter. Although the law does not specifically so state, it seems that this provision guarantees a right to have an interpreter appointed and compensated by the agency; and
- In any felony proceeding where the deaf defendant is indigent, the Criminal Justice Act funds used to pay for legal representation for the individual can also be used to pay an interpreter.

Unlike each of the 50 states, the District of Columbia has no interpreter law covering the court system. Therefore, in the District there is no right to an interpreter in civil matters, in less serious criminal cases or in any criminal proceedings where the defendant is not indigent.

What this means for deaf persons who need to go to court in the District is that they must either go to court without any interpreter or pay for the interpreter themselves.

Some judges require deaf persons to bring an interpreter before they may present their argument in court. This is very burdensome, especially because the majority of cases are before the Small Claims or the Landlord Tenant Branch and do not involve a large sum of money.

In the vast majority of cases, the judge will not grant a motion for court provision of an interpreter and most judges feel that there is no authority or funding for interpreters.

A few years ago, the National Center for Law and the Deaf helped draft a comprehensive court interpreter bill for Washington, D.C. councilmembers. However, Council Chairman David Clarke indicated that the City Council did not have authority over the court system and suggested that the congressional oversight committees on the District of Columbia would have to be the originators of an interpreter mandate to the courts.

The National Center for Law and the Deaf then had an opportunity to testify before the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations to the District of Columbia as to the need for court provision of interpreters in the District. Our efforts before the subcommittee were not successful. A similar effort by other groups for a $5,000 fund for interpreters of foreign languages also failed.

There are at least two possible ways to provide interpreters throughout the Washington, D.C. court system. One possibility is seeking support from Congressmen Walter Fauntroy and Michael Barnes of the House Committee on the District of Columbia.

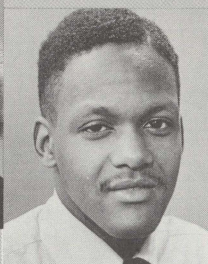

Another approach is convincing private groups or other sources to establish funding for court provision of interpreters for one year. This type of project could help demonstrate that the need exists for this type of service as well as give an idea as to what to expect in annual costs.

Personalities

Donna Wells is a survey archivist with the Archives. She is working on a nationwide survey of historical materials at state residential schools for deaf students. She has a bachelor of arts degree in history and a master of learning science with an emphasis in historical collections.

Glascoe

Reginald Glascoe is a campus police officer with the Department of Safety and Security. He has a bachelor of arts degree in the administration of justice and has worked for the F.B.I. and the Georgetown University police department. He is currently a part-time instructor in criminalistics at the University of the District of Columbia.

Curtis Robbins is a business applications programmer with Computer Services. He has a bachelor of arts degree from Gallaudet and two master of arts degrees, one from New York University and the other from the University of Maryland. He expects to receive a doctorate degree this year.

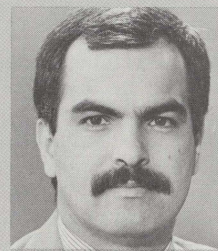

Robbins

Henry

Nathaniel Henry is a campus police officer. He is a graduate of North Carolina Central University with a bachelor of arts degree in criminal justice. He has worked as a counselor for various youth organizations.

Schroeder

Carl Schroeder is the assistant coordinator of the Visitors Center. In this capacity, he coordinates all visits to MSSD and KDES and supervises the Student Volunteer Corps. He has a bachelor of arts degree in American studies from Gallaudet. In 1983 he was awarded a fellowship grant from the Thomas J. Watson Foundation and spent one year in the Netherlands studying human rights issues of deaf persons.
